

Church Family News and Prayers

When I was a teacher, I'd get volunteered to do assembly. I enjoyed. I'd do poems and jokes and wacky stories about great disasters – my attempt to be all-singing, all-dancing and totally up-to-date. Not a success to be honest. I'd ask some pupils what they thought of my assemblies. "Not bad, sir," they'd say, "better than Mister Jones." Not a major vote of confidence as Mister Jones was the deputy head who had been in the school for the last century. I was trying too hard. Eventually I realised that you have to be yourself and see what happens. Even then, it was a bit of a surprise to discover which assembly created most reaction.

The Tate Gallery in Liverpool had run an exhibition on images of heaven: everything from small fluffy clouds to giant celestial shopping malls. So I wondered with them what heaven might be really like. Surely, it must be the place of new beginnings which stay that way and don't go pear-shaped after the first two weeks. And heaven's the place where all those hopes that got lost are found again. It's where your friends remain your friends, where you don't fall out over a careless word or a failure to phone. Heaven, I dared to imagine, is the place where what could be actually happens and we never have to live any longer with the thought of what might have been.

That was the assembly they talked about, arguing over whether there was such a place and, if so, what was it actually like. I was stunned: talking about heaven, I'd become some earthly use at last!
